Roll the Credits: IWU Alumni Have Roles in 315 Movies

BLOOMINGTON, Ill.--Lights . . . camera . . . action!

About three dozen Illinois Wesleyan University alumni have had on-and-off-camera roles in 315 feature and made-for-television movies, according to the seventh edition of "Illinois Wesleyan at the Movies."

Since the last edition of the movie guide was published in 1996, IWU alumni have appeared in an additional 72 films. Among these movies are the surprise hit, There's Something About Mary (Richard Jenkins, class of 1969); the political thriller, Absolute Power (Jenkins); the hit comedy, the Cable Guy (Andy Dick, class of 1988 and a cast member of NBC's hit sitcom, News Radio); HBO's bio-pic, Lansky, the life-and-times of mobster Meyer Lansky (Stanley DeSantis, class of 1975); and The Mod Squad, the big screen reprise of the 1968-73 TV drama (Jenkins).

News Media Comment

When the fifth edition of "IWU at the Movies" appeared in 1995, Gannett--the nation's largest newspaper chain and owners of USA Today--reported: "As unlikely as it may seem, Illinois Wesleyan University in Bloomington has turned out 21 actors who have appeared in 178 films and made-for-TV movies from 'Silence of the Lambs' (Frankie Faison) to Sidney Sheldon's 'Windmills of the Gods' (Stephanie Faracy).

"So many alumni of the university's drama program have appeared in films," the Gannett News Service reported, "that the school publishes a brochure called 'Illinois Wesleyan at the Movies,' suitable for keeping in your TV room for quick reference."
